POETRY.

BUILDING ON SAND.
BY ELIZA COLE.
"The walls to rise, 'tis good to see,
For some will build on sand,
Some on green grass and some on clay,
And some on shifting sand."
But here a man, so young and true,
Has set his foot on shifting sand,
And builds his house on shifting sand,
And builds his house on shifting sand.

How to Fill a Church.

I was once sitting at a table in the city of Boston, where I supposed myself to be a stranger to the company. A gentleman opposite however, appeared to know my face and entered into conversation with me.

"I understand, sir, you have opened a new place of worship in this city."
"Assuredly, sir, I have."
"You have a large place of worship—I suppose it will seat between three and four thousand people."
"About a thousand."

"How large is your society? How many members?"
"Perhaps a thousand."
"Society for something like a thousand still empty?"

"Well, sir, I am not much of a saint myself, but I can tell you, brethren are not very wise after your generation. I can tell you, sir, as a business man, how to fill up that immense house in less than five Sundays so full that there will not be a standing place left for the most curious and persecuting."

"The man looked with all his worldly wisdom at me. At length I asked him how it could be done."
"Well, sir," said the man, "you must say something or do something to which the multitude would like to listen. Common sense preaching and a simple hearted declaration of the good is not the thing. Now, sir, put an advertisement in this city paper, that next Sabbath you will preach a whole sermon with your eyes shut, or standing on one foot, or sitting on the pulpit cushion with your legs hanging over."

"Your humor will be full before the thing, and if you keep such novelties and do so, you will have more people than you can accommodate, and you will be the preacher of the city, and be followed by the masses."

"But how many of them would by such means be saved?"
"Ah!" said the man that's another subject."

A young man conversed with her husband, a disappointed philanthropist, on his conduct. "My dear," said he, "I am like the Prodigal Son—I have strayed far and wide, but I will now return and be saved."

"And I will be like the Prodigal Son, too," replied she, "I will return and be saved by my father's house, and of all she went."

Several weeks since—About a month ago we were brought before the Court by a man of the name of Jones, who was charged with the murder of a woman named Miller. The

The Social Serpent.

A lady whom we will call Mrs. Harding, touched with the delicate condition of a poor widow, who had three small children, determined, from an impulse of true humanity, to assist, in the hands of some friends and neighbors, an interest in her favor.
She made a few calls, one morning, with this end in view, and was gratified to find that her appeal was a favorable impression. The first lady whom she saw, a Mrs. Miller, promised to select from her own and children's wardrobe, a number of cast off garments for the widow, and to lend her in other respects, at the same time asking Mrs. Harding to call on the next day, when she would be able to let her know what she could do.

Pleased with her reception, and encouraged by the prospect of aid for the widow, Mrs. Harding called on her the next day, and was received with the same cordiality. She was received with the same cordiality. She was received with the same cordiality.

"What the matter with Mrs. Harding?" asked Mrs. Miller.
"I should think," said Mrs. Miller, "that she was in a nice business, running a school, or something of the kind, and that she was a very good woman, and that she was a very good woman, and that she was a very good woman, and that she was a very good woman, and that she was a very good woman, and
